Thunder and Lightening

Stormy, humid nights were always best shared. Curled on the porch, they held onto one another, bleach blond hair mingling with the thick dark curls. Fingers explored, tickling beneath clothes, soft sighs and gentle kisses mixing with the thunder.

Another flash of lightening lit the midnight sky.

Nestling his head on Slash's shoulder, Duff watched the rain, shivering as it pounded the roof of the porch. He loved these nights, loved sharing them with Slash, loved smelling the fresh, rain washed earth.

"Love you," he murmured between the thunder.

Another thunderbolt. Slash kissed his head.

"Love you, too."
